It employed the fuzzy analytic hierarchy process to set the objective weights of the evaluation criteria and select the optimal infectious medical waste disposal firm through calculation and sorting. The aim was to propose a method of evaluation with which medical and health care institutions could objectively and systematically choose appropriate infectious medical waste disposal firms.

Later, Laarhoven and Pedrycz proposed the Fuzzy Analytic Hierarchy Process (FAHP), in 1983, which was an application of the combination of AHP and the fuzzy set theory of Zadeh . The FAHP was developed in order to overcome the weak points of AHP, and nowadays this contemporary tool is often used to solve MCDM problems which are difficult to interpret, instead of the traditional AHP.
