If, says he, it is true that one generation comes and another goes, and the earth abides for ever, and if that is all that has to be said, then all things are full of labour. There is immense activity, and there is no progress; it is all rotary motion round and round and round, and the same objects reappear duly and punctually as the wheel revolves, and life is futile.

Abides for 2020 [UPDATED!]

The concept "earth=planet" simply did not exist in the Old Testament period. So: in the passage "the earth abides forever" the author definitely was not using "earth" in the sense "planet Earth" but, rather, in one of the many other senses of the word. Now: that being said... Take a clump of earth. Put it in a fire. It gets burned, or "burned up".
